A MYSTERIOUS ROBBER.

March Away From Home.

Why Aunt Cludy Spont the 16th of

"Oh, dear!" walled Aunt Lucinda, wringing her small wrinkled hands pathetically; "to think that we shall be obliged to spend the night in this house!" She walked over to the window nad looked out at the storm that was raging without. Sharp, cuttlag snow, that was almost hall, came tearing down from the dail, low-hanglng sky, and, caught in the grasp of the strong west wind, was driven past like a gignutic urmy of soldiers, tall and straight, marching on with regular trend, their faces among the clouds. There were occasional dashes of rain, just enough to have made a tramp abroad on such a night a most disagreeshle undertaking.

There was a cheery fire in the wide-monthed, old-fashlened fire-place, antique furniture occupied various places and positions about the room no old pictures adorned the walls, seme old pictures adorned the walls, and the door louding to the next room standing ajur, revealed the fact that a pleasant and comfortable sleeping apartment was just beyond. As the house was a large, ancient structure, and net at all rulnous, it is presumable the left of March. I had other things of more relative to the house but one was a large, and the left of March. I had other things of more relative to house but one was a large of more relative to house but one was a large of more relative to house but one was a large of more relative to house but one was a large of more relative to house but one was a large of more relative to the house but one was a large of more relative to the form of the relative to the large of the large of

There wesa wild. popular delusion, long entertained popular delusion, long entertained that no matter how bad the water might be when it was once frozen it must be purified. The theory was very simple, that freezing was a purifying process, and that ice itself might be accounted as the orghless of a subscripting species. And the complete of a subscripting species at the process of the witch we encounter to our water aupplies are preserved by freezing and turned loose into the gobiet from which we are expected to queff our most refreshing heverage. There is nothing that needs inspection more that ice, not even mlik. There are pourls about the city that some of our ice men regard as lakes, that are impure, and this lake ice holds in a cold state the poleons that have been contributed to the poels. We are not abular this augustic. We are not abular this augustic. not alming this suggestion at any particular concern, bet it is high time our market up to this date amount to the ice industry gave to the public control of the control o better assurance than herctefero of the quelity of their merchandise. The question of getting pure icc has become a very grave one. The ice carries the peculiar dangers that ere supposed to be attendant upon poverty into the homes of those supplied with all that makes life pleasing and ecoiningly secure. The rich as well as the poor sin polsou in their icewater. The cities on our great Lakes are much exposed to like ovlls.

There has been a typhoid fever vis itation in one of the suburbs of Chlcago this wluter quite deadiy in Its nature, and that should have produced alarm even greater than that of which we have been advised. The mild form of panic that hae prevailed among the people did not come soon euough. The question of the water supply from lakes when the Intake of the pumps and outgo of the sewerage are within a few miles of each other and there are variable currents of the wind and water, is a grave complication. It has been encountered at Bull'alo, Clevelend, Chicago und Mitwaukee. A man of genius at Milwankeo recently invented ao imarcuse screw by which ho takes a stream of water twelve feet in illamoter out of the harber and flushes the river with it. This is a good thing for the river, but the stain of the city can be seen far out on the lake and there are conditions in which it eppreaches perilously near the pumps. It is a question how to liush the river Remedy. without pelsoning the water supply. The question of puro water is o course lutimately associated with the question of pure ice. The public understands the former better than the latter, liencs the occasion for admonition and the opportunity of exciting general interest in the subject that the short supply of ice affords is one that should be intelligently improved. It becomes every housekemper to make personal investigation of the ice question.

Peculiar Methods

The aphorism that "ail ie fair lu war," seems to be the guiding star of those whose aim it is to attract the reader's attention in tha inter-
